

Situated near Nantwich in Cheshire, Barbridge is an important junction on the inland waterways. It is the meeting point of the main line of the Shropshire Union Canal which links Chester with Wolverhampton and the Middlewich Branch which joins the Trent & Mersey Canal.

The deep cuttings and high embankments which characterise this canal can be enjoyed for miles along with stunning sweeping views towards the Welsh Marshes.

Barbridge Moorings are approximately 225m long and provide space for up to 6 vessels spread across two distinct areas of the site.
